Steve Jobs Reminds Us To Live Before We Die

by Big Blue Water, LLC

Sometimes we become so wrapped up in our day-to-day lives that we forget to stop and remember the fundamentals of really living. It's ok. It happens to the best of us. For those who need a reminder follow the link below. There you will find Apples former CEO, Steve Jobs, speaking at a college commencement ceremony about "connecting the dots," "love and work," and to "live life remembering you'll soon be dead."

Opinions about Steve aside, the nitty gritty of his speech is a message worth hearing. As I stated earlier, sometimes we become so wrapped up in life that we forget to really live. Sometimes the words we need to hear most come from our closest friend or a person we despise. In either case, take the time listen. His words and the reminder he offers is worth fourteen minutes of our time.
